It is generally assumed that our organic law is permanent, unless amended by a proposition from two-thirds of Congress, or a convention called in accordance with the demand of two-blids of the States, and the proposed amendment ratified by three-fourths of the States. That is true, if the lutention of the framers of the Constitution is regarded. They left, however, in the hands of a mejority of the States the power to put au end to the Govern ment. Suppose a majority of the States should decline to elect Senators at all; then no law could be passed in accordance with the Constitution. A minority can compel the attendance of its members, but in this case it would have no majority to compel. There could be no constitutional Senate, and the Government would fall. It would be easy to av that these States would not do their duty. but there would be no remedy. A great me ority of the people of the United States micht letest this action of the States; for a combinalon of the small States might effect the object. Again, a majority of the congressional districts might defeat the election of a President; cither before the people or in the llouse In Corgress the States could so cast their votes as to elect nobody to the office of Presi ident, and there would be no remedy. It is olsin that a simple majority of the States, or if the people, could dissolve the Government and compel a change of the organic law, and there is no provision against the exercise of this power. The authors of the Constitution dld not presume to provide for such an emer gener. Leaving this power in the majority the plight have presumed that two-thirde would do something regularly by calling s convention, and :"at three fourths would retify it to eatisfy a majority. The framers of the Constitution old not believe in the fleacy of force to sustain a Government against popular consent; and if a mejority of the States of people would not entialn the Government, there was an end of it. They expected only voluntary union on the part of a majority. There are some things no Government pro vides for. In our Constitution, the freest, the right to resist oppression is not alluded to; for it is secumed that the Government will not oppress its ciriz:us. Our fathers all believed in resistance, if there was a good reason for it, but there was no place for such an explicit declaration in the organic law. It could not provide for its own pullification.

After the restoration of monarchy under Charles 11, the friends of prerogative had some advantages of public epinior, owing to the excesses of the revolutionary party. So it was proposed to declare that resistance to royal that county, sutborly was never allowable—that le, that there was no such thing as the right of revolulon. Parliament would not assert this, por, save the kistorian, would that body silicin that 100 resistance was in any case cllowable; the express declaration might be of dangerous consequences. Extremes Governments cannot provide for by organic law, or any other sor: of law.

The resolutions of '98 offirm that, our Government le a compact between independent States; that each State is entitled to judge of any infringement of the compact, and to so: k its own mode and ir essure of redress. By the same logic the other States in the Federal Government are an Ind good at paris to the compact. They, too, being parties, are entitled to judge of any infringement by " State, and to seck their own mode and meas ure of redrase. All this will do very well for logic; but, if it be sound, we can have a civ.i war, constitutional on both sider; for, according to the logic, each side is only exercising its rights under the Constitution. Too much logic will rot do in government. "Be no: overmuch rightcons, nor think threelf wisc overmuch." The men who framed the Constitution would not authorize the General Government expressly to make war on a State; for they would not provide for such a contingercy. They, however, declared that the Constitution, and the laws made in pursuance thereof, wes the supreme law of the land, anything in the aws or constitution of a State to the contrary not with standing. They had made it the duty of the President to take care that there laws be faith u'ly executed. They made him commender of the army and navy; so they gave blin the military power to enforce these laws. The generation of men that made and ratified the Constitution, made a law authorizing the President to call out forces at like discretion to overcome combinations against the execu tion of the laws, too powerful for the civil authorities. They did not provide that he should not do this, if the combination was supported by State authorities. In short, they who made the Constitution, or the laws, did not provide for the nullification of the Coustitution and laws. Our readers know that we condemn the conduct of this Administration, which has dis regarded our Constitution and laws; but wa cannot adopt another extreme, and advocate what we doem a heresy in the construction of our institutions, to oppose another herery. It is true that the Federal Government cannot make war on a State; for a State cannot be disfranchised, or her right affected, by the life conduct of her authorities. Their acts are null and void. They are not acts of the State. They are not the State, or the objects of co-etcion. The success of our system required particulars of the fire further then the testiwiedom, forbearance, and justice. It required wiedom, forbearence, and justice. It required tance. It was also thought that the houses of the titendly co-operation of the States and Federal Government. When these conditions in the neighborhood, would also be destroyed. full, the system falls; for all friends of tree institutions are opposed to a Union held together by the sword, with laws to be executed by standing armics. It is not the Union our went on board the French stasmer Peluse, cit. Some think time is all sufficient as a test of merit in a race-horse, and of races; others hold that it is of no use at all, and, in fact, more often delusive and mischievous than otherwise. The truth, as in most other mooted ques tions, probably lies in a golden mean be-tween the two parties. It cannot but be useful to note the time of races, and apply it as au clement in the deductions to made; but if a man thinks that a watch and a measured mile are all the requisites to test the merit of a performer, he is api to be acrely deceived. It is quite probable that the "time," as often taken in England, was of no use at all, and, in fact, rather mischievous and delusive than otherwise, eimply because it was inaccurate and unreliable. Lately, however, the time as taken in England, although no part of the official proceedings, closely approxi mates the correctness which is the rule here. Indeed, we see of late an attempt to carry out the time taking to an extent which can hardly full to be incorrect in its fractions, though the sum of the racelast Derby at Epsom, Bell's Life had the quarters for the race of a mile and a half, not run, he it remembered, on a round course, where the first quarter and a half mile are accurately measured and marked by posts. For our part, we decline to give the time of anything less than a mile, except as part of the narative, having no great faith in fractions, and bring unable to eee how it can be made of any use, even where the timers are most skillful and accurate. But let this pass. We think it cannot but be interesting and useful to state and compare the time and weights in five great races recently won by three year-olds, one of which, the Paterson Derby, look place here; three of which, the Derby, Oaks, and Gold Cup at Ascot, were run in England; and one of which was for the Grand Prize of Paris, in France. First, of our own Derby, the winner of which was Norfolk, a very fleet and grand colt in our estimation. With a hundred pounds up, the time of the mile and a half was 2 minutes 464 seconds, which is nearly at the rate of 1m. 51s. to the mile. That is, if the race had been run in 2m. 46 ls., it would have been exactly 1m. 51s. to the mil's. Now, the Derby in England, the same Cis-tance, with one hundred and twenty-two pounds up, was run in 2m. 43s, which is lm. 483s. to the mile. But, no &, iu comparing these two performances we are met by the facts that the fastest one was run over turf without sharp turns, but with a pretty stiff bill at the finish, while the other was over a dirt track, in which there were four turns to be run round in the race. It is also to be observed that Norfolk ran clean away from his horses at the start, and won in a canter, but, jur contra, tha Blair Athol had a bad start, and had to b rushed through a lot of horses under whip and spur. He also finished easily. In the Oaks, the distance and weights were the same as in the Dorby, and the French filly Fille de l'Air won in 2m. 47s. This, of course, is half a second more to the mile than the race run here by Norfolk; but the great discrepancy of weight must be horne in mind. This filly carried twenty two pounds more than he. The next of these races to be considered is that won at I'aris by Vermont, in which he not only heat the winner of the English Derby, but also the filly who won the Uaks. He also debelieved by the trainer to be the best colt of the two. In this race the weights were 110 libs, for colts, and 107 lbs, tor filles, and therefore the weights were ten pounds more than in our Derby, and twelve pounds less than in that of England. The distance was a mile and seven furlougs, and the time 2. tance was a mile and seven furiours, and the time 3m. and 39s. This is exactly wildered to the cook as milesters. So well by fourteen seconds to the furlong or 1m. 52s. to the mile. Looking at this time as it slands alone, the race was not a very Blair Athol and Fille de l'Air ought to have been defeated, if at all up to their mark. It may be said that the three furlongs made the difference, but we are greatto be considered is that for the Gold Cup at Ascet, which was won by the Scottish Chief. This coll, by Lord of the Isles, who was also sire of Dundee. Both of them belonged to Mr. Merry. The course for the Ascet Cup is the Course for the Course fo is so up and down as to be very severe. The last hill is a much greater cheker than that at the end of the Derby Course, at Epsom. The weights in this race carried by Scottish Chief were one hundred and three pounds, and he won it in the com-
